Section Guidelines:

- Portrait: People are fascinating subjects to photograph. They have the power to shape the world around them. A portrait can symbolise character, importance, power, beauty, weakness, and innocence. The identifying characteristic is the human element and conveying this through the image is what can make a truly incredible portrait. The portrait category is broad in scope. It considers a wide variety of portraiture from posed studio photography to environmental portraiture, candid portraits, self-portraits, composite imagery, to abstract portraits that may even be difficult to identify as human. Entrants are encouraged to submit emotive and original portraiture that captures the essence of their subject. Although we accept imagery that has been entered in other competitions, we would love to see new ideas in original work. N.B. In this instance 'Portrait' refers to 'Humans' only.
- Open: Anything goes; any subject, any style, in colour or monochrome.
